SALAD DAYS

Everything that's left over turns up again some time, laughs the Practical Person's nice husband, usually either in the salad or the soup. "Not so often in the soup, Dick, at this time of year," his wife smiled back, "but I do find that marvelous combinations can go in the making up of a salad, and I use a different dressing according to what the ingredients are. A purty mayonnaise with whipped cream in it (it can be sour cream you know), is lovely with the clear cut sort of salad one lays out on a lettuce leaf in individual servings, to tomatoes, cucumbers, slices of pineapple and all those next and proper things. A lovely salad of that sort is served in the skin of a nice banana from which the fruit has been lifted out through just one section. Alternate bits of orange, grapefruit and banana are daintily placed in the banana skin container and the whole laid on a green lettuce leaf and served with mayonnaise.

"Where the lettuce is not likely to be eaten, a curly bit of leaf lettuce is quite satisfactory groundwork, but otherwise I think crisp head lettuce is worth the difference in price, especially if you use a salad, as I so often do, as the price does resistance of a summer meal."

"For a big, substantial salad in a bowl, with second helpings for everybody, I use, very often, a dressing made of equal parts of oil, vinegar and cream. Here again the salad is lovely, as well as the dressing. I beat this mixture thoroughly in a drier before and at the last moment before serving I mix my salad ingredients in it. So for a few fine white leaves to line the salad bowl, I break the head lettuce into small pieces and put with it almost any left-overs I may have. Potatoes, beets, carrots, or, in a salad, or creamed, they taste very like chicken. Hard-boiled eggs are always a good addition to the salad, and if I use one hard-boiled egg, or a cucumber, or tomato or beet, I usually have that to slice up as a garnish for the top of the bowl. Eggs are very pretty set through the potato slices either whole or with whites and yolks separated.

"If you want a bit of piquant flavor with any salad, fry a few slices of bacon or use some you have had left over, and cut them across with your scissors. I made some individual salads the other day when I had an unexpected company to lunch, by adding these little shreds of bacon to a can of heated beans from my emergency shelf. Served on a lettuce-leaf and with a slice of tomato on top, this very substantial dish proved quite popular. "All these dishes are very popular with me," said the man of the party who had been listening with interest to his wife's little monologue.

"It's nice to have an appreciative husband, isn't it?" she answered. "My husband never pays me any compliments," said the wife of a neighbor with the suspicion of a sigh. "I'm afraid I'd grow weary in well-doing if I got no recognition," I admitted. "One does like to be told when one is nice, and I think if I get that, I can stand being told I'm not nice, too. Tom said the other day that he didn't think my bread was quite as good as mother's—my mother's, mind you, but my mother's, and then began to apologize for saying so, but I hushed him up. He's always saying things are nice, and if he thinks otherwise I want to know that, too. Since then I've been taking some extra lessons from mother and I believe my bread is a lot better."

Tailored Blouses

(By Rita Stuyvesant.)

The advent of the sleeveless frock has brought forth again a number of smart blouses, especially of the tailored type. Simple little blouses extremely chic, to accompany the tailored suit or sport skirt, or perhaps to complete the sleeveless frock. Wearable silks, dimities, crepe de chine, Canton crepe, and linen are all represented in the Autumn display. One of the smartest blouses comes in white imported cross-hatched dimity, buttoned in the back. A few tucks relieve the severity of the front, and collar and cuffs edged with real lace grace the neck and elbow sleeves. This blouse combines wonderfully well with a sleeveless frock, or may be worn with a tailored suit. To accompany the tailored sweater or to top a sport skirt, there is a tailored blouse of imported white dimity, also in washable silk. The interesting features of this blouse include a long roll collar and sleeves to the wrists. Both collar and cuffs are edged with narrow pleatings. Buttons and button buttons are arranged in two groups of three at the front. Slip-collared blouses are not out of use, although they are taking a new turn.

turn. One model with short sleeves is cut from silk and shows a round collar and turn-back cuffs. Pilot points outlined the collar and cuffs and there is a tiny bow or black cross-grain ribbon.

A lovely blouse of Canton crepe shows short sleeves and a smartly cut collar outlined with a thin cord. With this blouse comes a broad tie of jade green.

Among the tailored blouses there are a number of slip-over models. Canton crepe is the material of one particularly attractive blouse, and one may choose either white, navy, cranberry blue, black or red. This charming blouse is a lie in the back effect and has a long collar.

Silk crepe fashions a smart over blouse appropriate for sports occasions. It is with the new mild neck and has a beautiful border of embroidery in a contrasting color. A slim grille confining the fullness at the waistline. Kimono sleeves fall softly when cut from silk crepe.

Why Friendship
Is So Precious

Friendship is love without wings.—BYRON, famous English poet.

One good friend is not to be weighed against the jewels of the earth.—ROBERT SMITH, well known clergyman and educator.

Friendship is an order of nobility of great souls; for its revelations are more worthy than any treasure.—RALPH WALDO EMERSON, famous poet and essayist.

Friendship, gift of heaven, delight of great souls; friendship which makes us distinguished for ingratitude, are unhappy enough to know.—VOLTAIRE, the French philosopher.

Friendship heightens all our affections. We receive all the ardor of our friends in addition to our own. The communication of mind is necessary to the fervor of each.—WILLIAM ELIZABETH CHANNING, the great Unitarian divine.

If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life he will soon find himself alone. A man should keep his friends in constant repair.—SAMUEL JOHNSON, great English scholar.

A friend may well be reckoned the masterpiece of nature.—RALPH WALDO EMERSON, famous poet and essayist.

To be capable of steady friendship and lasting love are the two greatest proofs, not only of goodness of heart, but of strength of mind.—WILLIAM HAZLITT, the English essayist.

Friendship grows a greater lustre on prosperity, while it lightens adversity by sharing in its griefs and anxieties.—CICERO, the Roman orator.

Friendship is the nearest thing we know to religion. God is love, and to make religion kin to friendship is simply to give it the highest expression conceivable by man.—JOHN RUSKIN, the English philosopher.

In the school of life many branches of knowledge are taught. But the only philosophy that amounts to anything after all is the secret of making friends with one's self.—HENRY DYKE, American poet and essayist.

To whom shall we tell all our thoughts? Who better than a friend of our own age, exposed to the same cuttings, can understand us, hear our questions and answer our objections?—REV. CHARLES WAGNER, famous of "Youth."

A knowledge that another has felt as we have felt, and seen things not otherwise seen, has had a power, will, continue to the end to be one of life's chief blessings.—ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, famous novelist.

For The Children

THE POOR LITTLE PRINCE

Part Eight

There was a big fire growing in the centre of the island, and there the witches gathered. The little Prince and his magic dog, Tingles, kept quite close to their friend, the old witch. How surprised the other witches were when they spied the new arrivals.

"Who are these two strangers that have come to our meeting?" asked one witch.

"They are friends of mine, and as such should be treated with great respect," the old witch spoke up. Apparently she was a witch of importance, for there was not another question asked as to why she had brought her friends. Indeed, all the witches seemed quite agreeable to having the new arrivals there.

"There was a great pot boiling over the fire, and into this pot each of the witches put a contribution. Each one was supposed to bring something quite difficult to find, it seemed. The head with all, who was taller and uglier than the rest, stood over the pot and called out the name of what was brought. What strange articles some had collected. Into the pot went—the leg of a dancing goat, the eyebrow of a blind grasshopper, the tusk of an elephant, the whisker of a mouse, and so on.

"The wisest tool of an owl and dozens of other strange things. When it was all cooked and the savor of the feast floated through the air, the witches started to gather knowledge."

"Who knows how to get the bag of gold guarded by the great-tailed, pink-headed dragon on the top of the fiery mountain?" asked the little Prince's friend, the old witch.

"I know," answered one old witch, as she took a deep breath of the savor that was coming from the boiling pot.

The great-tailed, pink-headed dragon has been a guard on the top of the fiery mountain so long he has not had a chance to get a drink of water for a long time. To whoever carries him a drink of cold water he will give the bag of gold."

"But how can anyone carry a cool drink to the top of the fiery mountain? The heat from the fire in the mountain would make the water warm." It was the head witch who spoke these wise words.

"Not if the water was carried in a bag made from the skins of ferrets," answered the witch who knew all about the dragon. "You see, the coats of ferrets protect the ferrets from being heated up by the fire they carry, so they would certainly keep the water cool."

"Thank you for your information," Prince Philip's witch friend said. Tingles whispered to Philip. "The fairies will catch the ferrets and then make the water bag. Have courage! The bag of gold will soon be yours to carry to the Grand Duke." And the little Prince's heart was so filled with joy he could hardly wait until it was time to go.

QUESTION OF GAS WARFARE

LIKELY TO BE DISCUSSED

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Great prominence was given to day to Sir Edward Thorpe's protest before the British Association for the Advancement of Science last night, against scientific men of the world having to direct their energies to the invention of annihilating and poisonous gases.

Influential quarters the opinion was expressed that gas warfare ought to be one of the principal subjects considered at the Washington conference. The Daily Telegraph declares the Washington conference should take up this question, and settle it, because disarmament and limitation of armies would not be effective unless this form of warfare were abolished.

DAY'S END

CURRENT EMPRESS THEATRE ATTRACTIONS

WRITTEN BY AUTHOR OF
"THE MIRACLE MAN"

Advance Notices Indicate That
"The Sin That Was His" New Sensation
Picture by Frank L. Packard,
Another Great Success

Press notices from various sections indicate that "The Sin That Was His" Frank L. Packard, the author, has achieved another "Miracle Man"

his previous great success. It is accidentally that an author produces two such great successes in rapid succession, but from all indications Mr.
Packard has done that very same thing. "The Sin That Was His" has been pictured by Schnitz Pictures, under the direction of Hobart Henley and is scheduled for two days showing at the Empress theatre starting Wednesday next week.

The story of this picture deals with humanity as it is found in the street-corners of the great north, where the law is mostly home-made and applied.

Faversham is seen in the exceptionally strong role of a real man in whom the instincts for good predominate, but who, through being mismanaged, grows to hate the world and its people—whose turns against man and
God. The story of his rejuvenation is as stirring and full of heart interest
as its original.

Driven from the town where he had made his home because his motives were misunderstood, Faversham, as Raymond Chapelle, professional gambler goes on a mission of revenge. Arriving at his destination he is again a victim of misunderstanding, which makes it appear that he has committed murder. Before his real identity is discovered, Chapelle takes the part of priest who in his way to this town to take up a pastorate there, but he is so mysteriously injured in the storm, grows to hate the world and its people—whose turns against man and

God. The story of his rejuvenation
is as stirring and full of heart interest
as its original.

While ministering to the wants of injured priest, Chapelle is overcome with the man's great love for humanity, and this, together with the influence of a wonderful woman who has come into his life, work a rejuvescence which in the end brings happiness to all, and eventually brings a confession from the person who really committed the murder.

BILL HART SOME SCRAPPER
Vanquishes Seven Men to Save Girl
From Band of Bandits

Bill Hart is some scrapper, as everybody knows, but in his new Paramount picture, "The Teasing Bluck," which comes to the Empress theatre next Monday for a two-days engagement, he is a veritable superman.

A straying miner, band, with a lively girl who plays the violin, while the trulls of the California Sierras in the days of old. Mr. Hart is chief of the bandits who force the players to entertain them in the heart of the redwood forest. The half savage cut-throats are aid in their desire to capture the girl, and "Si-er" Bill, (Mr. Hart), forces them to fight him, one by one, for the right to claim her. He beats them all, and then, himself half-crazed, sends the girl and forces her to marry him.
That is the beginning of a story of human tragedy and joy, which unfolds in a mighty sequence of compelling incidents.

Mr. Hart wrote the story. Lambert Hillyer adapted and directed it. The photography was by Joe August, A.
S. C. Eva Novak is the leading woman.

MISS A. M. WILSON

Reach & Co.

After you get the issue of The Times we tell you about the Suitings or Blanket Cloth for sale in various colors or of dark stripes. Anyone who has not hitherto made their children's coats, both boys' and girls', would be surprised to know that last year dozens of mothers made coats who previous to doing so had thought that it was an impossibility. But hard times taught them a lesson. It was impossible for them to buy ready-made coats. So one woman told one and she told another, so the Ball of Knowledge travelled. Some of these garments made by women who had never made any before were marvelous instances of what a little application could do. Your curiosity doubtless is aroused. Well we will let you into onto the secret—The New Deltor System of the Butterick Patterns on sale by us only, in Macleod, was the creator of this knowledge of how to make your children's boys and girls, or mother's dresses and father's shirts. Many of them were superior to the bought garment. This system tells you to the fraction of an inch, without waste, how much material to get; the patterns are cut out for you. It only remains for you to put them together, baste, sew, then triumphantly exhibit the masterpiece to family and friends. Do a little thinking before the cold weather. Pick out your patterns, coats, dresses, pants, shirts, etc., so that there will be no delay. Take turns to meet at each others house, the your material with you and each can gain information from the other.

On Monday night Smith's Orchestra journeyed to Monarch to play at a dance in the Monarch hall by the Women's Institute as the last item on the program of sports held during the afternoon and evening. The hall was filled to capacity and judging by the expressions of enjoyment on the faces of the crowd and the reluctance of the dancers to see the program brought to a close the music was highly appreciated. At the conclusion the committee expressed themselves as highly pleased with the entire day's program.

The school fair dance last night at the eVerns' hall was a great success—good crowd, good floor, good acts and good music. On account of postponement of the fair till Wednesday, Sept. 21st, the country people did not come in to the dance, as they understood the dance was also postponed. It was decided last night and announced at the dance, that another dance will be held next Wednesday evening after the fair in the same hall, the same orchestra, with refreshments and the same prices. This will give the country friends of the society an opportunity of enjoying a first-class dance.

LEGAL POWER AND CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT

It is pretty apparent that so far as ordinary domestic law cases are concerned the inactivity of appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is coming to be recognized, even by those to whom any proposition of this kind was distasteful a very short time ago. The elucidation of Canadian-made law by Canadian judges, the interpretation of Canadian contracts by Canadian courts—the propriety of this is now so obvious that we may look for a limitation of appeals perhaps by the voluntary action of that Judicial Committee itself.

It is now suggested that appeals should be limited to cases involving interpretations of the constitution. As our constitution and its amendments are beyond the scope of our own parliament, the argument that a law made in Great Britain should be interpreted by the Judicial Committee in constitutional cases must have no logical basis.

We have now been told by three very eminent English lawyers in succession that Canada has the right to decide for herself whether or not appeals to the Judicial Committee should continue. This is the opinion of Lord Broughborough, of Sir John Simon and of Sir Malcolm MacNaughten, who spoke in these terms at the meeting of the Bar Association at Ottawa.

It would be interesting to have these great Canadian authorities tell us whether or not Canada has the power to exercise this right which they admit she possesses.

Many years ago the Canadian parliament passed an act forbidding appeals in criminal cases to the Privy Council. Prof. A. B. Keith, who is a sound authority, says that this legislation is invalid. If Canada cannot forbid a certain class of appeals it does not seem probable that she can forbid all appeals.

Doubtless every one of these eminent lawyers would say as a matter of law that the Canadian parliament is not empowered to restrict litigation coming to the Privy Council.

Canada, therefore, has an undoubted right, admitted without question by these eminent constitutional authorities; but she has not the power to exercise this right. Is that not a remarkable state of affairs? Is there not in it something humiliating to Canadians?

This is but one of the countless anomalies arising from the fact that our constitutional rights have developed rapidly in recent years, whereas legally we are just where we were fifty years ago.

THE SEPTEMBER SUN

The September sun smiles softly
Upon the meadows brown,
Where little feet are seen
Where milk-pods show their down;
On fringe of purple asters,
On plumes of golden reed,
It lingers, loth to leave the spot
Where these late blossoms nod.

It seems to hold the spirit
Of summer's gracious hours,
With nature at her gayest
And earth all bright with flowers—
So, when life's summer passes
And winter winds blow chill,
May youth's glad summer brightness Flood heart and spirit still.

SCHOOL FAIR POSTPONED

On account of weather conditions during the past few days the management of the School Fair decided to postpone the fair till Wednesday, Sept. 21st.

It was found that the roads out west were in the hills and south on the ridge were so bad that it would be impossible for the children to get in with their exhibits. The secretary informs us that it is from these districts that the greatest proportion of the vegetable exhibits come from this year. The grounds also would not be in its condition for the sports, and that is the part of the fair the majority of the children are looking forward to. There is a splendid list
